Sith ArmorWhile Sith wardrobe can vary wildly, Sith gear is always a symbol of their power, whether they got it through mastering the dark side of the Force or through their prowess in battle. There are no standards when it comes to what the Sith have to wear - through power, they get the win, and through the victory their chain of imperial fashion laws is broken. Since the beginning of this project in the summer of 2012, armor has and continues to undergo a vast and complex evolution, as I continue to improve my methods of producing props and upgrade my arsenal of tools. The V2 Sith Acolyte armor is upgraded with a full Sith acolyte helmet, and a new V2 breast plate. The beautiful thing about the new installation is that since the Acolytes were shown without hoods in the new cinematic trailer Donation, and since I had the back plate for the helmet, I was able to wear a suit without a hood! Having the hood off really cut into heat retention, allowing me to wear a helmet pretty much the whole time I was in a con! At the tables of the 501st Legion/Mundalorian Meers. These guys had some really amazing costumes! Big Daddy vs. Sith: Who Will Win? Chicken soup, coming straight up! The Lords of the Sith. This is the first version of the armor that has the original, V1 chest plate and front mask only (not a full helmet). The first photo in the series is definitely my favorite - thank you very much for having it and sending it my way, Patrick! The footage below is taken in front of the burning Coruscant background from the SWTOR Tricked trailer - the coolest photos of the entire trip! This is the first version of the armor that has the original, V1 chest plate and front mask only (not a full helmet). Thank you for looking! During the Cold War it was considered ancient. The contents of the show CharacteristicsEdit consisted of segmented torso armor in the form of a humanoid chest. Square, hard-looking persdrons covered the shoulders, armpits and part of the back. The head was protected by a flat top, without a visor military helmet with a large, heart-shaped opening. A protective blade-shaped skirt was worn around the waist. In the during the Cold War, many of these ancient armor were still on display in the tombs of the Valley of the Dark Lords on Korriban. When they were still a disciple, the Wrath of the Empire found one such armor in Naga Sadow's tomb. He lay in the sith sarcophagus along with an ancient lightsaber still containing the corpse of a long-dead Sith lord. The other was kept among other artifacts in Darth Tanaton's private library. Behind the scenes, this armor was probably based on Sadow's Naha, which first appeared in Tales of the Jedi: The Dark Lords of the Sith 1: Masters and Students of the Force in 1994. It features the same type of flat headdress and protective skirt reminiscent of the officers of ancient Rome. Dooku, K Asajj Ventress src Sith clothing was a term given to the common clothing of members of the Sith Order in all its forms. Unlike the Jedi, who did not believe in material possession, the position of the Sith Lord was very individualized, and the personal clothing of each Dark Lord reflected this. Although the clothes and armor worn by the Jedi Knights of the Galactic Republic, the Sith clothing was actually much more personalized to the owner than her Jedi counterparts; for many Sith, their armor and clothing were an integral part of their identity. For users of the Dark Side, their clothing and armor usually involved some physical protection measures such as traditional armor plates, cortosis, or even autonomous life support systems. Many Sith were most easily recognized by their distinctive clothing and often used this to further intimidate or impress their enemies and allies. The contents of The Show Story of the Old Sith Empire Mark Ragnos, the Great Dark Lord, wear this victorious helmet during your battles in the afterlife. The personalized Sith armor worn by Naga Sadow were fallen Jedi who enslaved the Sith, a species originally from the Styga Caldera. This has led to a mixed-race population with mixed cultural characteristics. The Sith Order's clothing combined the inspiration of both the Jedi, the guardians of justice and freedom in the Galactic Republic, and the Sith. Unlike their Jedi ancestors, the Sith Lords enjoyed wealth and outstanding signs of their wealth. They adopted a quick fashion full of bright colors such as green, light red or purple, with ornamented pieces of gold armor. They also preferred extravagant headgear, military helmets and capes with eccentric necklines. Naga Sadow and Ludo Kresch were good examples of this. Most Sith Lords would feel pleasure and sense of power jealousy and greed of their material possession aroused among their peers. This attitude is still present among the Sith millennia later-Master Sordis is known to wear only the best silk and most expensive jewelry, and he possessed luxury apartments on Korriban. Many Sith were imbued with the Force in creation, so that they could be used to enhance or assist their ability to guide the dark side of the Force and call for more power or wisdom than they would naturally be. Some of these artifacts were still intact and usable during the Old Sith Wars, such as the clothes of Alema Keto or Crado, and the dreaded helmet of Datka Grausha. About 5,000 DBIs, some of massassi's warriors who accompanied Naga Sadow on Yavin 4, were also known for sporting specialized combat gear that allowed them maximum dexterity in the dense jungle. Combat armor Yes, you must wear armor. The Sith Lords of the Old Empire wore personalized combat armor designed to strike fear at their enemies. Each Sith Lord usually has its own unique set of armor, although standard models are known to exist. Sith armor traditionally consisted of metal plates worn on dark clothing, and were usually covered with sharp spikes, which were used as weapons. For some time before 3998 BBY the young Onderon metallurgist Shas Dovos made his own suit from the armor of the Sith from steel plates, following the instructions of the ancient book. Later, Dovos merged with his armor, turning it into a new and powerful, known as Warb Null. Thousands of years later, Darth Vader's heavy suit followed this tradition of donning frightening and scary protective coatings. If the latter closely followed the process of making ancient armor, it is possible that they were made using the alchemy of the Sith to increase the physical strength and vitality of the user. The old Sith Wars, after the dark lords Ofar Kuhn and Ulich Sel-Droma, founded their Sith Brotherhood, the first order for their new disciples was the Jedi pogrom, in which the disciples were pinned down to attack their Jedi masters. Thus, very few of them had the opportunity to change their Jedi clothes, leading to even less form of the Sith Order. Kuhn continued the tradition of combat armor as he himself wore one. Sith soldiers wore hooded robes that could hide the owner's face while keeping them from being identified. Some Sith Robes also came equipped with basic armor from the cortose. These gowns shared some similar fashion traits with The Jedi Adventures of Rob and Rob's Ceremonial Jedi. Revan's Sith Empire Darth Malak wore a tight crimson bodysuit that showed off his powerful physique. At the time revan founding his new empire, the Sith probably decided to get more practical clothes. The technology itself was aware of the fundamental improvements in the and gave a more rigorous and high-tech view of the entire galaxy. Perhaps that's why people like Darth Bandon, Darth Malak or even Revan himself wore such unpainted sets of clothes. Darth Revan himself owned a special set of armored robes, including a full Muendalolol helmet. The numerous renegades of the Dark Jedi who joined Revan simply clung to the style of Jedi clothing adapted to the dark shades of their new devotion. The Sith Empire also had a huge number of henchmen in its command, including Sith stormtroopers and Sith assassins, whose outfits were highly specialized. After the Mundalorian War, the officers of the Republic who served under Revan turned and joined the new Sith Empire. They replaced their red and yellow uniforms with azure blue/grey overalls, while high-ranking officers wore caps. This uniform was also worn by the interns of the Sith Academy. The Great War Some time after the Great War, the Sith robe was a popular choice of clothing for the Sith, serving the Sith Empire and the Sith Emperor during the Cold War between the Sith and the Republic. It was heavier than what the Sith usually wore before and after the events of the Great War and the Cold War. The Jedi developed similar clothing that was equipped with their armed forces. They also had a special type of glove called warrior gloves, which they wore during the Cold War. New Sith Wars If this is all we should stand against Lord Hoth, we can also burn our black clothes and start practicing the Jedi Code. (Kopezcz'src) Throughout the new Sith wars, the Sith clothing style has evolved into a more sober form, though it still had a touch of old sophisticated fashion by the ancient Sith lords. Bright colors remained in favor of various shades of black, dark purple and gray. Sith usually wear black capes with kiras and multi-layered straps with buckles with symbols similar to Sith tattoos. Lord Skere Caan and Darth Bane themselves were often dressed this way, and Bane even wore an armored late and vambrace to protect his left hand. Later, Darth Bane wore a solid-shelled orbalian armor, which, thanks to a symbiotic connection, increased his ability to the Force. The Order of the Sith Lords .Why are you hiding inside the bonnet of your cloak? are the clothes of my Order, Viceroy. (Nute Gunray and Sidious'src) Two of the Sith palpatine dress the Sith Lords who came after the establishment of Rule Two were in hiding and generally favored more simple black clothing. Their concealment of black clothes made them look as if they were the creatures of the night. Darth Sidious preferred a monastic robe made of harsh zaid fabric. His preferred robe was black, with a raised waffle pattern on it and long sleeves that reached just below his wrist. This gave rise to the illusion that Palpatine, Sidious's alter ego, was simply a simple man. black robe, Palpatine possessed several sets of Sith clothing. One set was similar to his favored black clothing, but was made of burgandy material. The other was made in a burgundy velvet fabric decorated with Sith symbols. Palpatine publicly wore it in front of the Senate when he delivered the Declaration of the New Order. In fact, he knew that no one in the rotunda would know the origin of this garment, and he appreciated the time of the shelter to end for the Sith. The other was a grey robe with a large hood, black velvet caplet and puffed sleeves as seen as he fought Yoda. When the reborn Sidious set off for Corriban at 11, he decorated a shorter, more practical version of his famous black cape, complete with a caplet and a long straight cane. Sith students wore special training gear during their studies to become Sith Lords. An example of such training equipment was Darth Maul, and consisted of a uniquely tailored vest. As soon as Mole was awarded the title of Sith Lord, he was dressed in the black clothes of the Sith Order. In a more sophisticated fashion than the standard zeyd-cloth cloaks, Darth Maul wore black robes and loose-fitting desert-like clothing, and a collar coat belted at the waist. A very large hood would drape down the back while the sleeves were elongated and almost touched the ground. Where the sleeves are attached to the main body of the robe, two cracks were cut through which the Mole could put his hands. Although he is in his original Jedi clothing, Darth Vader's clothing bears a good resemblance to the hooded cloaks often worn by the Sith. Darth Tyrannus, Sidious's second pupil, kept the traditional clothes of The Counts of Serenno. It consisted of a dark brown two-breasted Vjun tunic, a pair of horse pants and a cloak-armor, the shape of which would increase the silhouette of the count. He also wore black boots made from a rare skin rancor, reaching just below the knees. Although Asajj Ventress was not a Sith as such, she wore Sith attributes, as Dooku himself noted. Her outfit consisted of a slinky black and white shirt with a high collar and leggings under a flowing black skirt. The skirt was easily removable, just laying the belt away. When Darth Vader had to put on a costume for which he was later known, Darth Sidious insisted on creating a frightening look and completed the design with a cloak and tabard resembling traditional Sith clothing. Vader himself provided his secret disciple with an imperial uniform, which he had established many times throughout his life. Starkiller's training gear was simple and versatile, seeing how he went through numerous training sessions and volatile missions. Starkiller used variants of his basic equipment, such as homemade heavy training equipment, which provided protection in toxic and contaminated environments. Another is Light training equipment, which is suitable for use in a humid environment. One Sith Of Dart The Order wore armor of various designs. Darth Krayt himself wore an impressive form of armor created by the Yuuzhan Vongs, which was designed to instill fear in the hearts of his enemies. Darth Willock wore a set of combat armor over his robes, while Darth Neil wore a strange set of armor designed to intimidate enemies. Behind the scenes of sith gowns designed by How George Lucas envisioned the Sith as a dark analogue of the Jedi, their garments were mostly designed as black versions of Jedi clothing. The under-the-robes for Palpatine's costume as emperor were actually Japanese kimono made of black raw silk, as shown in the book Star Wars: The Magic of Myth. Ben Kenobi's interior clothes were also made of the same material, but in a beige version. Darth Maul's clothes were made of handmade fabric called Indian Homespun, which was painted black by costume designer Trisha Biggar. Tales of Jedi Design Although time covered by Tales of Jedi History kind of fits Star Wars Medieval, costume style rather reflects antiquity. As for the Sith, they seem to be broadly inspired by ancient Babylonian or Egyptian fashion; for example, the headdress of Naga Sadow and Darth Andeddu is very similar to the pharaonic deshret and crowns of hepes. In addition, instead of being confined to dark colors, the clothes of these ancient Sith were quite brightly colored, extremely luxurious.
