The summary of the summit, which has attracted undead power players from across the central United States, is sure to be tense, in part because of the build-up of protests from conservative, anti-vampire scholarships to the Sun. Accused of murdering her husband, the King of Arkansas, Sophie-Anne is set to stand trial at the convention. The queen is already in an precarious position, her power base weakened by the damage to New Orleans from Hurricane Katrina, and there are some vampires who would like to finish what nature has begun. Sophie-Anne's main accuser is Jennifer Cater, a vampire who was training as a lieutenant for King at the time of her death. Jennifer is determined to see Sophie-Anne staked out the sun for killing the king, although Sookie knows that the queen is innocent of the crime. Sophie-Anne plans to put Sookie's gift to good use, having her listen at the thoughts of people working for other vampires at the convention, as well as for the hotel as alliances are formed and loyalty tested in what can only be described as a political power struggle with potentially deadly consequences. The story begins with Sookie entering Fangtasia to talk to Eric and those who pay him for the difference, discussing the charges against Sophie-Anne. Sookie agrees to work for Sophie-Anne, despite the warnings of her fairy godmother, Claudine, that at the convention will forever link Sookie with vampire politics in the minds of all present, in a very public sense. Meanwhile the relationship with quinn heats up. At the convention, Sookie meets Barry Belboy Horowitz, the only other telepath she knows. Shortly after their arrival, Jennifer Cater and much of Arkansas' entourage were brutally murdered, making it easier for the queen to be tried. The juices soon prove invaluable to the queen as she makes a great suggestion that the queen appoint her closest friend and child, Andre, to be king of Arkansas and then marry him. Sookie also finds a bomb planted outside the Louisiana suite and rescues the queen. She also reveals something shocking about quinn as a teenager, he killed a group of men who raped his mother and then became indebted to those local vampires to cover up the crime. He had to work as a werewiger/gladiator in the ring for three years, and in the process became a terrible fighter. At the trial of the queen, Sookie rescues the queen once again as, being the only witness, she applies logic to prove that the queen is innocent and that her accusers are manipulated. In response, one of the main prosecutors is put right in the courtroom. Impressed by her usefulness, Andre accosts Sookie and begins to force her to exchange blood with him to bind her constantly and close to the queen. She avoids this breach only because of Eric's intervention, which has her sharing more blood with him. This third, large blood exchange with Eric makes Sookie become more powerful and frighteningly vampire, even though she is still human. She can feel Eric very strongly and now he has the right to turn her into a vampire at any time. Sookie is horrified to realize that he will never be free of Eric's control. Sookie and Barry Belboy then gather a number of clues they had throughout the convention and realize that several bombs have been laid all over the Sun Scholarship Hotel and they intend to leave in the daytime when the vampires will all be sleeping and helpless. The quick thinking he and Barry allow some vampires and some people to lose themselves, and Barry and Sookie in the team use their telepathy to find the wounded people. Sookie finds Andre, who has only minor injuries, and watches impassively as quinn puts him to free her from his control. The queen Sophie-Anne escapes, but loses her legs. Sookie rescues Eric and Pam, and he and Bill escape with minor injuries, but the number of dead people and vampires is very high. This week we're on the seventh book, All Together Dead begins for the third weekend in September, and between Definitely Dead and this book, Hurricane Katrina hit, dramatically changing the balance of power in vampire states. Previously, Area 5 (northwest Louisiana) was far less influential than the other half of the state. Now it is one of the most profitable. The chapter opens as Sookie arrives at one of our favorite hotspots, Fangtasia. Pam opens the door, shares that Eric is full of happiness, and asks about the delicious brother of Sookie and Sam. Sookie shares what Jason thinks of getting married, and Pam consoles Sookie, quoting one of her favorite philosophers. Dear Abby. Pam brings her to the boardroom, and she's full of the supernatural. Eric, who looks at her, continues to ignore her. Clancy, the bar manager (who has since drained witches even more creepy) is also there, with Felicia, the newest bartender, along with two other vampires, Indira and Maxwell Lee. There's Bill, whom Sookie tried to disavow (a la custom werewolf), an ancient vampire named Talia, and two other visitors-Sophie-Anne Leclerc to the right-hand man, Andre, and Jake Purifroy, who were turned into a vampire in a previous book. Andre bows to Sookie and offers her his place (a badge of honor) and they continue the meeting. The queen lives with the sheriff of the district of four, Gervaise, for now. Andre gives a report on significant damage, and implies that the sheriffs of the district will be taxed for repairs. He also shares that they lost thirty vampires in Louisiana and then in Mississippi. This is a huge amount for vampires, and their power is greatly weakened. Then Sookie asks a key question... Does one of the kings or queens attending the summit have a weather predictor in the state? The conference was supposed to take place in late spring, but was constantly postponed. Had the summit started when it was originally planned, the queen would have been incredibly powerful, and other monarchs would not have been so eager to prosecute her for the king's death. Now she is in a bad position. Andre thinks That Sookie makes a very good point, and Eric says: Juices are good to think outside the box. That's so true. Andre also mentions that Named Jennifer Cater was in training to become Peter Threadgill's assistant, and has now filed a lawsuit against the queen. The queen believes that since she was married to Peter, Arkansas goes to her. So if Jennifer wins, the queen will lose Arkansas and have to pay the state a significant fine. Jennifer claims that the queen lured Nitghill to New Orleans, and planned to kill him the whole time. Sookie instantly replies: But it's been since that happened at all. In doing so, Andre cleans the back of the head with his fingers, making Sookie realize that she is the only witness to the king's death, except for Andre and Sophie-Anne. With this understanding, her heart misses a beat, attracting the attention of all the vampires in the room. Everyone else will keep going, but Eric won't forget. Andre explains that the queen demands that Sookie be by her side at the Summit. Eric will attend, Pam, and Bill, Mr. Cataliades, Dianna, Gervaise, Ribon, and Siegbert make the Louisiana part of Eric set up an account for a top-notch Tara's Togs, so Sookie can buy clothes for the trip. He explains that he has set up accounts for all his employees, which keeps Sookie's pride. The meeting is postponed and Sookie returns home. When Sookie returns from Haley's wedding the next day, Eric picks up the phone and brandishes it, and Sookie is very happy to see him. She had seen it only three times since the events of the previous book, and both times were brief and not as romantic as one might hope. With Amelia out of the house they should be able, a. a. When quinn tells her that he plans to take a month after the summit and spend it with her, it's all the commitment she needs. Sookie can read enough of his mind to say he is sincere, but she can't read enough of his thoughts to get distracted by them. After that, when Amelia returned to the house, they discussed her difficulties with changing Bob-Cat back to Bob-Man. She can't find her mentor after Hurricane Katrina. But her dad is apparently a wealthy financier in Louisiana named Copley Carmichael (this is news for Sookie, and she's glad, quinn asked). Amelia manages the apartment complex bought for her, lives for income, as well as her own payments for the magical work. At this point, Jason calls and asks Sookie to go to Hotshot in an hour. He and Crystal are getting married - a surprise! Crystal is pregnant again. When she arrives with quinn, the Panthers' respect for her clearly doubles, especially Crystal. Sookie isn't quite sure what the problem is, but she'll accept it. Then Sookie discovers that she has to vouch for Jason as his only living relative, meaning that she must accept the punishment if Jason does wrong. The couple must vow to be faithful, keep in Hotshot, and help other members community if they need it. Jason agrees to keep his promises, as does Crystal. But while Jason is sincere, Sookie doubts his ability to stick to his word. The crystal has the ability, but not sincere. Juice calls her at night, and reminds Crystal of what she can see in her head. Crystal doesn't care, and she's marrying Jason anyway. After the ceremony and celebration, Sookie and quinn leave the party, while Amelia stays with the shifter. Sookie and Pam go to tell Bob the cat that Amelia will be late, he is clearly angry, and stalks off to throw on Amelia's bed. The next day at work, Sela Pumphrey uses the opportunity to ask Sookie how long she's scheming to get Bill back, and mentions the trip to the summit as evidence. Sookie is so angry at the innuendo that she almost slams her, but Sam steps in and tells Sela Pumphrey that she is not welcome in Merlot's. She's tracking down Bob for contacting the Panther, and they made a pact that she wouldn't date the men until he returned to normal. Claudine also stops, concerned Sookie attending the Vampire Summit. She worries because she can't be present with so many vampires around, and thinks there will be no problems. She also worries that so many will see Sookie and learn about her abilities, she will never be an innocent witness again. It this Sookie, and she wonders what her own motives are for going: Was I just curious what the agenda might be at the Vampire Summit? Did I want to attract the attention of more time members of society? Did I want to be known as a fanbanger, one of those people who just adored the walking dead? Isn't some corner of me long chance of being around Bill without looking for him, still trying to make some emotional sense of his betrayal? Or is it because of Eric? Unbeknownst to me, was I in love with a bright Viking who was so handsome, so good at love, and so political, all at the same time? These are all good questions, but Sookie concludes that she can't fully understand her own motives, but she's only aware and she can actually use the money. The next day, Sookie travels to Tara's Togs to choose clothes for the summit. Tara is upset that Sookie is still spending time with vampires, and is ready to end their friendship, and resume a different relationship with JB Du Rone. In the evening of the same day, Pam visits the bar. She worries about Eric- he hasn't been the same since he stayed with Sookie, not the carefree vampire he used to be now, when he has feelings and attached. Sookie disagrees that he has feelings and claims he is worried about something else. But Pam asks the clincher: Why do you think Eric would fly fuck what the bill was ordered to do, much less reveal it to a human woman if he didn't have inappropriate feelings for you? Pam. At the same time, Amelia goes to the bar, and Sookie introduces her to Pam. They clearly have a connection. Meanwhile, Arlene is now very very in the Brotherhood of the Sun, and her friendship with Sookie clearly suffers for it. She's incredibly rude and condemns Sookie's connection to vampires, and Sookie can't stand it. She calls her on her own problems, and comes out of the bar with Pam. Sookie starts crying, and Pam wipes away tears (somewhat denying the comforting act, sucking tears from her thumb). With Pam's help, Sookie realizes that Arlene wasn't a good friend to her, she just used it. As Pam says: She's lazy. This extends to her friendship. If it's easy to be friendly, she will. If the wind blows the other way, her friendship will disappear. She found some way to be an important person in her own right, hating others. That's so true. But the real reason Pam visited Sookie isn't to talk about quinn or Arlene, but because they didn't know about Bill's mission, or that he used Sookie for the queen's purposes. Eric, in particular, did not know. Pam agrees that it would be easy to write off The Power of Sookie and the impact on their lives on her fabulous blood, but does not explain it. Juices are not telepathic from fairy blood, and it did not affect her strong personality. While they are related, Pam also shares the story of her death and the birth of a vampire. She met Eric in London on the last night alive, she snuck out of her parents' house to meet her lover. Her parents didn't come home, she met Eric. He was lonely, and when she woke up, he held her and explained everything. She loves being a vampire - she has all the freedom she's been deprived of in her human life. Pam is loyal to Eric and willingly obeys him. Although Pam has gone her own way for years, she was happy to join him at Fangtasia. Pam's goal today is to ask Sookie to spare Eric, which completely embarrasses Sookie. Pam's there because she cares about Eric and wants him to be happy, and he wants Sookie. But Eric arrives, and is clearly angry at Pam for her intervention. She actually gets down on her knees and calls him a master that Sookie has never seen her do before. When she leaves, Eric walks in front of Sookie and just grabs her and kisses her. Sookie can't help but answer, but then she thinks of quinn, and reluctantly pulls away. Eric asks if she's quinn, Sookie says she's her own and that he's being funny. Eric never gave any indication that she was important to him and that he wanted to be with her. But Eric clarifies that since he had amnesia, he wondered why he ran to her house, why he ran to her. Was he supposed to be looking for someone he hated? Loved? Was it an accident? Sookie suggests it was fabulous blood, Eric just says no, and then he's gone. Amelia takes Sookie to the airport the next day, where she meets the rest of Shreveport's vampires to take Anubis' private jet. Bobby Burtham is waiting in front, Eric's day boy. Sookie had never met him, but his telepathy tells Sookie the story who she blocks all the other brains, then she tries to listen to him and others at the same time. They determine that Barry is better at choosing who thinks in a crowd. Sookie has better nuances and details, but their hearing is the same with regards to broadcasting from different brains. When they hold hands, however, the volume increases to an incredible degree. But she just used it. As Pam says: She's lazy. This extends to her friendship. If it's easy to be friendly, she will.
